Solemn and Red Taped.

Courts-martial of officers of high rank are solemn affairs. The court and the accused are all decked out in full uniforms with plenty of gold lace, buttons and braid Courts of inquiry are just like them, except that they have no punitive powers. There have been only two courts-martial for gen eral officers in this city in the last twenty years. And both of them dealt with army officers. General Swain, judge advocate general of the army, was found guilty of improper financial transactions and was sentenced to suspension for a long period of years. That was some seventeen years ago. General Egan's case is more recent It grew out of the Spanish war and arose ever the bad language used by the commissary general in commenting upon the criticisms of General Miles. Egan-was also sentenced to suspension from rank, but was restored to his place a short time ago and is now on the retired list. The last naval court-martial of importance which convened in Washington grew out of the loss of the old Kearsarge on Roncador reef. But in that case it was commander and a lieutenant who were put on the inquisitorial rack. Still there was lots of gold lace and solemnity even in that affair. No one envies Admiral Dewey and his colleagues. September is a very officer of rank enough to entitle him to sit on such a court is about as cumbrous and uncomfortable a specimen of sartorial

His father was one of three brothers who came here years ago from New England and made fortunes in the hotel business and real estate speculation. The older Joseph Willard was eccentric. That is putting it very mildly. He owned millions of dollars worth of real estate within a block of the treasury. Willard's hotel was his. He had a score of stores and offices, which were almost invariably vacant, and besides owned one of the most valuable vacant lots in the heart of the business section, at the corner of Fourteenth and F streets. Brookie, Infatuated with Woman, Becomes Furtously Jenious Because as Part of Pluy She Accepts Love of Another.

One dead; another dying. This, in brief, is the havoe wrought yesterday morning by a madly jealous man, who armed himself with a pistol and went out to get even with the world. Thad Brookle, the man who wielded the pistoi, lies dead-a suicide. Mrs. Millie Lighthawk, playwright and actress of the cheaper strata, known on the stage as Millie Allen, was the victim hospital, the shadow of death gathering about her. As if to add a tinge of realism to a play, "The Arizona Female Bandit," written by Mrs. Lighthawk, the tragedy occurred during rehearsal. A boarding house at 1307 Capitol avenue was the scene. The woman is shot through the lungs and s suffering internal hemorrhages, which the doctors say may result in death at any moment. Brookie's death was instantaneous, the bullet piercing his heart. It was all done so quickly that those who heard the shots could hardly realize that it was not a part of the play, which,

As the full cast of characters had not arrived for the rehearsal, the tragedy was and Steve Lighthawk, the latter a 7-yearold boy, believed to be the woman's stepson. A dozen or more persons who were in tially unconscious. They carried her to a bed in an adjoining room Comparatively little is known of either of the principals in the affair, as neither had been in Omaha but a short time. The woman was an actress and a playwright about 22 the stage name of Millie Allen, she had been a member of various third rate dramaad given considerable of her time to dramatic composition, an art in which she displayed great perseverance and come skill. One of her trunks is half full of scenarios, librettos and the dog-eared manuscripts of speaking parts. Little is known of her husband, Earl Lighthawk, who is not living in Omaha. Mrs. Light bawk came from St. Joseph a month ago and has since been drilling a company of semi-amateur thesplans in her latest play, The Arizona Female Bandit," intending to take them on the road in the fall.

Brookle Leaves a Record. Thad Brookie, an arcent admirer of Mrs. Lighthawk, was a painter and paper hanger, who for several weeks has been boarding at the Metropolitan hotel. He has a criminal record, but had given the Omaha police some trouble. Nothing is known of his famly connections. Jealousy seems to have been the motive for Brookie's double crime. He was in love with Mrs. Lighthawk and because she spurned him he had frequently threatened her with death. Yesterday his ejection from the house brought matters to a crisis and n a moment of insane fury he made good his threat. An inquest in both cases will be held today or tomorrow.

Desmond is the Hero. The personnel of the company as it lined up for rehearsal follows:

William Desmond Millie Lighthawk Noma Schultz Thad Brookle Sam Queaxer Steve Lighthawk Roll/ The scene of the play is laid partially in Desmond is a detective of the Sherlock Holmes school, who is always ferreting out mysteries, and saying, "Just wait a minute!" Just wait a minute!" Noma Schultz, the heroine, of course plays the title role, but being a cripple and only 12 years old, seems to be strangely handicapped for the part. However, this all comes out right in the last act, for one of these "divine healer" chaps with long whiskers appears, makes a few passes and she steps forth whole and sound as a dollar. Then the spectator is permitted bucking bronchos, engage in hand-to-hand fights with the villain and finally to scale a prison wall to rescue her friends. Desmond knew this all the while, but being in love with Noma, it suited his purpose to keep still about it. Sam Queakler is a grouchy old million ire of St. Louis, who is also in love with Noma, but she scorns his gold as in real life she scorned his love. Rolly, dressed as a girl, plays a soubrette
